fiberglass parts, semi large fenders and floorboards. With the possible acceptance of orders by his club members he looks to own two of these new bikes all by himself.

"Mr. Calda, we hear that you have a detailed drawing of what this new V-4 Duke is going to look like once it is in the frame and body details are on. Could we see it please and perhaps you can tell us what we are looking at exactly.

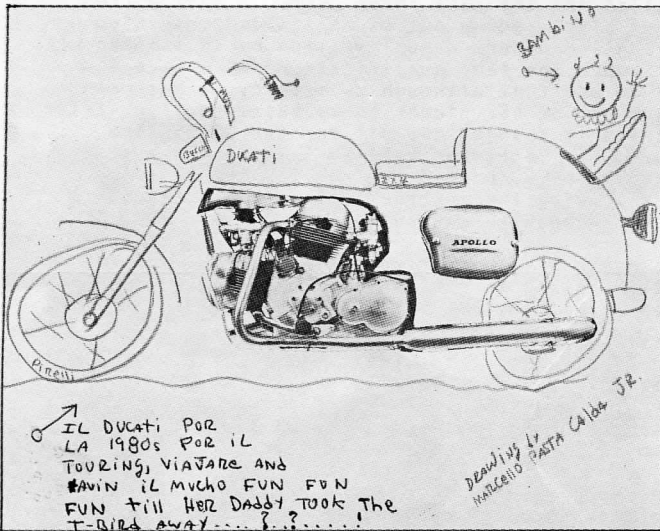

Escusati signori DIOC corrispondente, per favori de directari me per il placio del toiletieri? Per favori, you me excusati pero io gotta take-o il crappo mucho bad"

"Yes, yes, Mr. Calda I see what you mean by the aerodynamic design of the rear section giving this machine such flowing movements while maintaining the utmost standards in advanced design and technology. And also agree with you on the choice of tires, what other than Pirelli. Do you think this kind of advanced design will appeal to the motorcycling public in the 80s ?

"Hey boffuno, whatsa matta for you? I needed to pinche el loaf. Favori de direction me alle toilet, ma,ma mia magio il mucho la pasta....."

Mmmmmm, you are right, yer for sure. Gang, he says that long distance fast touring motorcycles will be the thing of the future and that the comfort that is so desireable to the American touring people especially those that own large Lincolns and Buick LaSabres, will have to be taken into consideration when building large capacity touring machines like the Apollo and that no matter what Harley Davidson, GL 1000 Lead Wings and Moto Gro-teque come out with the Apollo will be the bike to for the serious touring buff."

With this we conclude our interview with Mr. Pasta who I notice has left our booth in a big hurry and is making a mad dash for the TV Stations comfort stations. Before he left Mr. Pasta wanted me to tell all you members of the International Society to Bring Back the Apollo that our day is coming when owning an Apollo will be a reality and we wont have to drool over pictures like the ones we see in this interview.

Thank you folks and now we take you back to DIOC headquarters in Miramar, Florida with our Anchorman Joel Eliel.
